SERVICE STATIONS FOR HONOLULU

Within the next three months, Honolulu will be equipped with a series of service stations built and operated by Union Oil Company of California. Their completion will offer a service that has not hitherto been available to motorists on the Island, and also gives to the Union Oil Company of California the honor of being the first of the several large oil companies doing business in Hawaii to establish service stations. Other distributing points in addition to the four now building will be established, and H. B. Weller, manager in Hawaii, is studying the city for the most suitable sites, taking into consideration future growth and trend of traffic.

In addition to the service stations that are now building, the Union Oil Company of California has recently completed and moved into its large new plant covering four acres, in Iwilei.
